'Bricks, Mortar & Charm'

Exhibit Documents Beaver's Rich Architectural Styles Over Two Centuries

The Heritage Museum's summer/fall 2010 exhibit, "Bricks, Mortar & Charm," drew enthusiastic crowds and was featured in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, Beaver County Times and on the website of the Pittsburgh History & Landmarks Foundation.

The display explored the fascinating range of rich architectural styles found in Beaver. Different design styles and the time frames of their construction since the early 19th century were highlighted. Photographs of Beaver homes, researched via tax records to ascertain the dates they were built, illustrated the various architectural features of each time period.

Addresses were noted, and a map on display, to encourage folks to walk around town to see these and other homes firsthand.

A detailed scale model of the ill-fated 1877 Beaver County Courthouse (burned in a 1932 fire) greeted visitors when first entering the museum. This model, built by Robert Smith, was the basis for the clock tower that highlights Beaver's streetscape.

The exhibit otherwise was limited to residences due to space limitations. Exhibits chair John McLaughlin, along with Mr. Smith, Richard Pontillo and other volunteers, had the immense task of gathering, organizing, and setting up the exhibit. Museum chair Ed McLaughlin expressed the hope that the exhibit will inspire visitors to explore Beaver and neighboring towns to view firsthand the variety and richness of the architecture in Beaver County. "Fine examples of this architecture are found in any one of our river town communities," he said.

The photograph display of homes, divided into four quadrants, covered a half century. Early 1800s homes were characterized by Federal, Georgian and Greek styles, typically wood, and due to limited resources, were simpler in design than the Victorian homes soon to come. Prosperity due to industrial growth in the late 1800s led to higher quality craftsmanship and ornate detailing of the Victorian, Queen Anne, Italianate and Romanesque styles of homes built in this time period, when Beaver was emerging as a choice community for train commuters to Pittsburgh.

Above: scores of photographs taken the past year document Beaver home styles. Left: a panel of "Then and Now" images of local residences, using contemporary sketches made a century ago by local realtors.

The booming growth of communities in the early 1900's led to the mass production of homes in the 20th Century, Period Revival and Beaux Arts Classic styles. Retailers such as Sears and Roebuck sold "kit homes" that were ordered from a catalogue, delivered, and then put together like a kit.

Local architects were sometimes hired to build three or four "sister homes" by an owner who purchased several adjacent properties; the row of nearly identical homes on the 500 block of Corporation Street, and homes on Market Street and Taylor Avenue offer examples.

Growth continued in the post-World War II era, with Renaissance, Classic Revival and Modern styles taking precedence in homes constructed from 1950 to present day. Selected photographs educate visitors about the architectural features associated with each style.

A collection of architectural artifacts complemented the display: doorknobs and decorative wood cornices were just some of the items rescued from older homes, some no longer standing.

The craftsmanship evident in older architecture has the power to bring one back in time, to feel the lifestyle of a slower, perhaps more authentic, time of neighborhood strolls and sitting the porch with family and friends, just passing the time as the rain pours down.

Here in Beaver, we are fortunate to still have the charming elements that are rarely built into communities today, rare items that artfully enhance the our town's character.

us and we were very pleased with the large turnout and the many compliments. This encourages us to plan other social events in the future.”

The Social Committee, consisting of Tommi Wagner, Mary Anne Peluso, Jack Bechdel, Mark O’Leary, had a stated objective for the event “to showcase our facilities and serve as a bridge between BAHF and the larger community” – a goal achieved. Guests representing every age decade from twenties to the nineties gathered to socialize and enjoy the grounds. Said Mary Anne Peluso: “I think the event was popular because of the location, the price, and the simplicity...it was fun, classy, relaxing, engaging, and it accomplished what we hoped...lots of people enjoyed to the museum!”

Over the Labor Day weekend, the Heritage Foundation threw a birthday party for 170 guests celebrating the 100th anniversary of the completion of the former P&LE (now CSX) Ohio River Railroad Bridge. Several guests were first timers at the Museum, and were impressed with the current architectural exhibit, as well as the wonderful food and entertainment.

Val Brkich, author of a book about the bridge, presented a brief history of this marvel of engineering. Music was provided by Donna Groom of the Skyliners. Patty Colavincenzo and Lynn Clayton provided a festive German meal featuring brats and beer. Commented an attendee, “I thought it was one of the best social events I attended this year. It was a beautiful night...a very relaxed atmosphere...the tent gave the whole place a carnival look.”

Heritage Foundation president David O’Leary, who spearheaded the event, said “This was a new event for

Living History Portrayals on July 4th

The Heritage Foundation's Fourth of July performance of Living History: A Visit from Some Remarkable People in Beaver's Amazing Past, gave an authentic glimpse into the lives of noteworthy Beaver citizens. Written by Robert Smith, the stories featured photographer John Ubalto and education official Cora Blackledge. Said Smith: "We are dedicated to the mission of promoting awareness and appreciation of the rich history of our townspeople through research, documentation, education and preservation."

At upper left, Hugh Harper portrayed John Ubalto, a survivor of the Charge of the Light Brigade who changed his name, possibly to gain the favor of the father of a countess. No one knows why his romance with the countess was unsuccessful, nor why this brave adventurer traveled from Europe to settle in Beaver and become a photographer.

At right, Melissa Schneiderman brought to life the notorious probation officer, Cora Blackledge, whose legendary "tough love" shaped the lives of juvenile wards. Miss Cora, who could knock out a grown man with a single right hook, was equivalent of the boogie man for parents who wished to scare their children into good behavior.

At lower left, Cassidy Soto, who played one of Cora Blackledge's juvenile wards, enjoys a post-show treat. Soto was one of six children who learned about local history by taking part in the re-enactment.

50 Years' of the 'Times of Our Lives'

To explore an attic and find a forgotten heirloom or antique is thrilling. Thanks to Beaver County Jail Warden Bill Schoupe, who made an astonishing find in the attic of the former jail annex in Beaver, the museum has obtained 245 bound copies of the Beaver County Times from 1935 to 1985. In a small permanent display, the museum will exhibit select volumes from that day's date 50 years ago.

Daily newspapers were available to jail inmates to keep them educated during incarceration. Some forward-thinking individual preserved them by binding them into quarterly volumes, resulting in a comprehensive record of local news and culture that spans a half century.

To open the cover of one of these massive books is to step back in time. An October 1942 newspaper features stories, announcements and advertisements that paint a picture of life here during World War II: news about rationing; job advertisements for factory workers; announcements of local girls getting married to soldiers, and of local soldiers returning from war. The entertainment pages list movies showing at a host of local theaters – beautiful buildings like the Oriental and the Majestic, most of which are no longer standing. Ads promote the virtues of war bonds, while human interest stories tout the latest in child-rearing advice, and the sports pages document developments with local football teams. Paging through these volumes, one is instantly transported into our community's past.

Upon discovering the books, Warden Schoupe and the Heritage Foundation arranged for them to be stored temporarily in the basement of the Carnegie Free Library in Beaver Falls. The County Commissioners then agreed to donate the volumes to the museum to be properly stored, preserved, catalogued and shared with the community.

'Beaver Tales' Thrill Kids

In September, story lovers of all ages were treated to a second year of "Beaver Tales" – a unique storytelling event, the Heritage Foundation's gift to the community from the Blanche E. Shaw Memorial Fund to promote education.

Four spectacular storytellers shared their craft and delighted audiences. The tellers were Michael Reno Harrell, Kim Weitkamp, Andy Offutt Irwin and Charlotte Blake Alston. At the Beaver Area Middle School and Dutch Ridge Elementary School, they visited classrooms to relate on a personal level with their young audiences. The big event — Ghost Tales — was held at Irvine Park, with the gazebo adorned with ghostly décor.

A New Sign for Fort McIntosh

For the past two years, a serene walk along River Road in Beaver may not have been quite as quiet and peaceful as one might wish. Thomas Bryan, President of Tri-State River Products, contracted by the Army Corps of Engineers to maintain the width and depth of the Ohio River between the CSX railroad bridge and the Vanport Bridge, knows that while dredging of the Ohio River is necessary to maintain navigable waterways, it has also been a nuisance to local residents.

His company set out to do something to extend goodwill to the residents of Beaver who have been inconvenienced by the dredging. Explains Bryan, “We always take into consideration the communities in which we work and make every effort to give back something as an expression of our appreciation.” Bryan communicated his wish to Borough officials, who connected him with the Heritage Foundation.

Two or three suggestions were explored, and the ideal project was identified. Located at the corner of River Road and Market Street, Fort McIntosh’s original sign was erected when the archeological dig was completed, for the dedication in October 1978 – a ceremony that took place almost two years from the day of the fort’s completion in 1778. Over time, the sign began to show its age as it exhibited the wear and tear that can be expected after three decades exposed to the elements.

Additionally, the sign’s information was outdated, as it referenced the 1978 owners of the house across the street, no longer living there. Replacement of the sign was put on a long-term wish list and set aside in favor of more immediate needs – until now. For Thomas and Tri-State River Products, replacement of the Fort McIntosh sign was the perfect project: it benefits the location that is directly affected by the dredging; and, as dredged river gravel and sand are used in making construction products, the project fits in well with what Tri-State River Products’ business. The company offered to build and pay for a new entrance plaza and sign.

The teamwork began: Heritage Foundation official Robert Smith produced a design for a new plaza and sign; then Thomas Bryan hired stonemasons and artisans to bring the design to fruition. The sign is displayed on a concrete plaza in the shape of the fort. This design educates visitors about the fort’s construction: most notably, the use of angles, or “bastions” that enabled soldiers to store artillery and fire in all directions from each corner of the fort. All of the sand and gravel used in the construction of the plaza’s foundation slab was obtained from the Ohio River in Beaver.

The sign itself is also educational, as it is constructed from the same antique materials believed to have been used in the original fort. Sandstone of the same type used in the fort’s construction is used for the sign’s base and columns: The base resembles a period hearth, while the columns represent chimneys – both features of the original fort.

The sign is topped by a canopy shed roof with cedar shake shingles – the same type as used for the fort’s roof. Topping the hearth, and supporting the granite slab with its emphatic lettering, are hand-hewn logs thought to have been salvaged from the fort when it was de-commissioned by the Army, and used by settlers in building their homes.
